

DRTA VIRTUAL TRAINING PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT VIRTUAL WORKSHOP FRIDAY 26 February 2021

10AM- WORKSHOP COMMENCES
4.00PM - WORKSHOP ENDS

This timely workshop delivers vital information for Diversional and Recreation Therapy professionals providing services in a range of contexts. The theme of this full day education session centers around embedding human rights principles into all aspects of professional practice. The programme includes:

- Understanding human rights An overview of human rights history and principles and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
- How is a human rights framework different from person-centred and relationship-centred approaches? Unpacking some of the key differences between traditional models of service provision and a human rights framework. This session offers practical examples including approaches to assessment and evaluation.
- What does supporting 'identity' and 'culture' really mean in the context of leisure and recreation services? There has been lots of talk about 'culture' and 'identity' in relation to providing services and support – what does it all mean and how are they supported by leisure and recreation professionals?
- Critical thinking for leisure and recreation professionals Critical thinking is a vital skill and approach to professional practice. This session includes case-studies and examples of critical thinking in relation to leisure and recreation service provision – expect to be challenged!
- The right to self-determination and decision-making for all clients/residents Looking at practical methods and approaches to ensure that even the most vulnerable clients/residents are supported to continue to make decisions about their lives and about their leisure and recreation engagement.

The educators and presenters for this session are:
Daniella Greenwood, Kayla Garside and Nicole Peel
